THE OLD ORCHARD. n memory's halls some pictures dwell, With dear associations blest; Whatever be our treasures there

Doefry.

This stands spart from all the rest. With some it is a face, a flower, A glorious day, a sunset hour, A something that's beyond compare; But unto me the one most fair Is of a grey old orchard sweet, With bloom leaves scattered at my feet, With rebbins flitting through the trees, And music from the humming bees.

It was my childhood's playing ground, And of it brightest memories come, My brothers and my sisters dear Played in it round our happy home; When all our little tasks were done The orchard echoed with our fun; And robin gay, now gone to rest, Tuned up his throat, with ruffl id crest, But wondering hushed, in mute surprise While listening to the merry cries Of children in their gladsome mirth, The happiest sound in all the earth.

Tou cannot die to me, old trees, What though your usefulness be o'er. You're living in my mem'ry yet As bright as in the days of yore, When your spring blo-soms, pink and fair Made fragrant all the balmy air; Or when your summer's leafy shade A cool retreat for children made; Or autumn's sunripe frait so sweet Was gathered from around our feet, And by our father stored away To cheer us on some wintry day.

Physician and Burgeon, ELM COVE, Washington Tp, Monroe County, Ohio. O. days have soon dropped into years, The years into a life-time grow. And heads that then were dark or fair Will soon be sprinkled o'er with snow; But years may come or years may go, Bring wealth or want, joy or woe; Fame, with her mocking laugh, may come But only death from me can take . DETUILST, The picture which those old trees make Visits Woodsfield Regularly. I guarantee better work and use better materials -Indianapolis Journal.
